Selected Poems from Dear October

1. "Crimson Whispers"

In this mesmerizing poem, Morris captures the fleeting moments of autumn's beauty. The lines dance delicately on the page, whispering secrets of falling leaves and the bittersweet feeling of change. With each verse, the reader is transported to a serene forest adorned with crimson hues.

“Leaves twirling, floating gently free,

Crimson kisses caress the tree,

Whispering secrets of seasons passed,

In autumn's embrace, I am en masse.””

2. "Misty Mornings"

In this ethereal poem, Morris takes us on a journey through misty mornings, where the boundary between the mystical and the mundane blurs. The imagery creates a sense of tranquility and introspection, as if time itself slows down during these tranquil autumn days.

“Misty tendrils embrace the dawn,
Whispering secrets, never withdrawn,
Mornings draped in a soft, hazy hue,
Unveiling dreams both old and new.”

The poems of Dear October chronicle the evolution of the natural world and a daughter caring for her mother during the last year of her life. Months of the final year act as the scaffolding for the collection, as they reflect on the twelve moons. The spirit of home, family, and mother-daughter relationship intertwine with the diversity of culture and ecology in northern New Mexico. Dear October is a gathering of poems on the intimacy of caring for a dying parent at home, while being acutely aware of the progression of time and the natural world. The poems were often the way the author prepared for loss—written through events, memory, landscape, myth, and dreams. The writing regards a childhood in Oklahoma but mostly celebrates the diverse landscape and cultures of New Mexico.
