Book Description:

A bouquet of poems written at a time when, remaining indoors offered us an opportunity to rekindle our bond with nature. These poems appear to have organically evolved with the dewdrops, sunshine and moonshine. Odes and elegies on roots and plants, rhymes and rhythm on our humane link with nature, these verses weave our oneness with nature. Nilakshi Borgohain lays bare the power, love and violence of nature she experienced in From the Alcove. The anthology has a divine spark as it begins with the poem Feels Like Heaven and ends to experience resplendence within, throwing a rainbow of thoughts in the flowing waters of a river where the drops rebound to the riot of colours. Although Nilakshi has not absolved herself from the materialist existential world and her poems strike a note of realism, her work maintains the higher altitude of sublimity as it is enshrined in the soul of nature. She turns mystic and writes :

Where I do dwell, the mist wrapped river
Unfurls to silver, orange, grey, blue, pink.

Whether you live in a tiny house, an urban apartment or a bungalow, these delightful poems will nudge you to nurture a plant, a garden, a mini forest if not for organic food, then surely for solace and peace. Nilakshi uploads nature related posts on her website. You may visit her at www.nilakshiborgohain.org to explore more of her nature inspired new ideas.
