How do you say goodbye to somebody you loved?

When you're a poet, there's only one way to do it. You write, over and over again, when everything is spiraling around you, when all of the dreams and plans that you made are lost. There's nothing left but the loss, the ache, the missing. And if you're not careful, it can swallow your life.

This collection of poetry spans thirteen years of grief and healing: the uneven process, the setbacks, the hurt, the whole cycle of it, over and over again. Love is messy; losing it is messier--and healing is never a pretty process. This collection is a poet's attempt to piece himself together, one stitch at a time.
