At any given time in our lives, we are in the midst of forming or looking for relationships. How often do we pause to look at those that are formed without thought or action? In this book of short stories and poetry, Peter Fifield gives us a glimpse through his words, at some of those relationships.

An interesting connection is formed when a stranger's possessions fall into the hands of a young man struggling for inspiration. A little boy, no longer in the world that was his, reaches out for bonds of friendship in his new circumstances. A chance moments of conversation between friends, between a man and his thoughts and from a lover to their lost love... Aspects of relationships not often explored, can be found in the stories contained in "The Soul's Petals".

Food for thought about how even a chance moment with another person, can have impact upon a life.
