This is a collection of small prose and poems written right before and during my second hospitalization for mental illness. These short pieces are undated but in order, and the story they tell is my own yet put to the interpretations of who I hope will be my readers. I am sharing my writing because I think it has power as an artistic entity and I think its relatability and un relatability is relatable. These thoughts will help to de-stigmatize the works by and about people suffering from mental illnesses, and any ounce of profit that comes from the selling of these works will be donated to Project Semicolon, an organization dedicated to “presenting hope & love to those who struggle with mental illness, suicide, addiction & self-injury.” Let’s get to work and
